

Google Analytics Course Overview

This Google Analytics course is intended for delegates with good experience of Google Analytics who want to move beyond the basics of counting visitors. The course will show delegates how to interpret data and extract meaningful insight from Google Analytics. Most importantly the course will encourage delegates to take action during the course that will improve the tracking & analysis of their online strategies.

Among other aspects you will learn how to navigate the Google Analytics reporting module, filter out noise in your reports, use advanced segmentation, understand conversion funnels and create bespoke reports.

Course Trainer

The course is run by Hugh Gage, an accredited Google Analytics specialist with a background spanning web analytics, online advertising communications and usability. He writes the usability and analytics column for .net Magazine and sits on the Web Analytics Association Examination Committee. In addition to consulting for several of Search Star's clients he also runs www.engage-digital.com which consults globally from his home in Singapore.

Delegates must bring their own WiFi enabled laptops to log in to their own Google Analytics data during practical sessions. This will allow them to practice their newly learned skills on their own data. At the end of the day, delegates will leave with fresh ideas on how to optimise their web strategies and actionable insight into how consumers are interacting with their own website.

Audience

Many marketers can use Google Analytics at a basic level but are not able to glean enough insight in order to make meaningful website changes. Attendees must want to move beyond simply counting visitors and get the data & insight to make informed decisions about their website performance or acquisition strategy.
